

Meter 2 Cash Solutions, powered by multi-utility company Flow Systems, is prepared for the potential upcoming changes in the embedded energy space.

New regulatory controls being put forward by the Australian Energy Market Commission (AEMC), the leading government policy advisory body, has made a recommendation to the Council of Australian Governments that only authorised electricity retailers will be allowed to supply electricity. This, in effect, prevents bodies corporate and landowners from on selling electricity in their buildings.

“Improving consumer protections and ensuring our clients can continue to operate normally has been our top priority, we are excited about these developments,” said Meter 2 Cash Senior Energy Consultant, Richard Claus.

“For over ten years, Meter 2 Cash Solutions have been able to offer a simple, cost-effective utility billing administration service to the Body Corporate sector. Now that we are part of Flow Systems, we can offer much more to our customers and the industry as a whole.”

These recommendations could soon see the ban of on-supply of electricity and gas by most exempt retailer Embedded Networks.

These powerful recommendations recognise the benefits of Embedded Networks but find that consumer choice and protections can be limited.

Potential changes in the law would mean that bodies corporate and most landowners will need to appoint an authorised retailer to provide services on their behalf.

Flow Systems, as an authorised electricity retailer since 2017, stands with Meter 2 Cash Solutions. They enhance our offering and by operating under this licence, the Body Corporate will no longer be liable for the gate meter electricity costs or compliance breach penalties imposed by the AER.

“Additionally, we will indemnify the Body Corporate against residential energy debts due to non-payment. These reforms are far-reaching and impact the vast majority of the clients we serve,” added Richard.
